

Here are two quotations that inspire me:

"Try not to become afraid of your manuscript. The uncertainty and doubt of returning to a blank page or a knotted spot in your story can create a reluctance to return. But remember, the time you spend being afraid of your manuscript is time you could have spent on it!

"Even if you only have the time or energy to simply re-read what you've previously written, the more frequently you visit your play, poem, story or novel, the more your project will subconsciously write itself.

"Staying in regular contact with your story will keep it in your imagination."

— by Zahida Rahemtulla

"It is easier to lose yourself in a good book than it is to sit down and write one."

— Unknown